of Churchill College, during his lifetime, I gathered in this case that some of the people he consulted considered it would be particularly inappropriate for him to be associated in this manner with a nuclear weapon. Brown said the old gentleman, who will be 88 this autumn, had enjoyed his cruise in the Mediterranean, but was visibly feebler than he had been last year on a similar trip.

We had a lunch today at the house for the following:

The French Ambassador and Madame de Courcel
Mr. Ian and Lady Caroline Gilmore
Mrs. Ian Fleming
Mr. Wilmarth Lewis
Mrs. John Ryan
Mr. Raymond Mortimer
Mr. and Mrs. Walter Lippmann
Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Alsop
Mr. and Mrs. Dean Acheson
Mr. and Mrs. O'Shaughnessy

It was announced in the papers this morning that Walter Lippmann was the recipient of a Pulitzer prize award. Both the new French Ambassador and his wife are attractive,

Mr. Joubert and Mr. Pearl, of the American Society in London, came to confer with me about inviting a British speaker for our July 4th dinner. We agreed to try in succession Chief Justice Parker, Lord Mancroft, and the famous surgeon, Dixon Wright.

Lawrence B. Myers, who has been here for some time on an annual Seminar on Foreign Aid policy, came to see me, with Miss Belcher. I found him interesting, chiefly, I suppose, because he patiently listened to my ideas as to how to reform our foreign aid program.

General EarleG. Wheeler, Deputy Commanding General, U.S. European Command, Paris, came to see me, with Maguire, his POLAD. Wheeler is a fine looking man. I enjoyed talking to him.
